Akos receives his award from Jon Snow

One of Ambika's longest serving security caretakers, Akos Kreacsik, has received a bravery award from the Metropolitan Police.

The award, presented to Akos by Channel 4's Jon Snow recognised his bravery in coming to the assistance of two Metropolitan Police officers engaged in arresting suspected criminals. Akos helped the Police wrestle two criminals to the ground, enabling additional officers to reach the scene and complete the arrest. Finally Akos testified in Crown Court providing the court with his testimony.

The award ceremony, at which Akos was the only civilian recipient, took place at Camden Town Hall on the 25th March 2011, and was attended by Jon Snow, the Mayor of Camden - Jonathan Simpson and the Metropolitan Police's Borough Commander, Chief Superintendent John Sutherland.

As mentioned in the Camden New Journal "In what was described as an unprecedented case, a member of the public received a police award for rescuing two officers during a chase in Hampstead. Akos Kreacsik sprung to the aid of the officers who were violently attacked when they lost sight of two suspects who had just robbed a mobile phone shop in Hampstead High Street last year. The officers were being assaulted and couldn't reach their radios to call for back-up because they were pinned to the ground after being jumped from behind. Mr Kreacsik, a security guard, jumped on top of the more violent of the two offenders, detaining him. He later gave evidence in court and secured their convictions."

Akos's ability and confidence to provide assistance to the police officers involved in what was a violent incident is testament to the training and instruction received during his time with Ambika.
